In August 2017, I stepped down after six years as Dean of American University's School of International Service (SIS), overseeing 120 full-time faculty members, 70 staff, and 3,000 undergraduate, master's and doctoral students on campus and online. I also served as president of the Association of Professional Schools of International Affairs from 2015 to 2017. I continue to co-direct the Bridging the Gap project, which trains, mentors and advocates for scholars of political science, international relations, law, and public policy to pursue policy-relevant research and theoretically grounded policy work.

HIGHLIGHTS AS DEAN

- Hired a diverse, multidisciplinary group of 26 tenure-line faculty – including those who study governance, global health, urban ecology, environmental sustainability, terrorism and national security, resource management, and racism, as well as experts on China, India and Russia. Brought other notables such as Ambassador Susan Rice and J. Ann Tickner to the School in residence.
- Initiated an innovative partnership with the leading online education provider 2U, creating the first online Master of Arts in International Relations (MAIR) in the United States, and launched the rapidly growing online Master of International Service (MIS) executive education degree. The SIS online programs now enroll 270 students – one-third of whom are active duty U.S. military or veterans.
- Created an office to support faculty research and hired a team of dedicated professionals who work closely with faculty in their pursuit of external funding for research and other School partnerships.
- Launched the SIS Advisory Council on Diversity and Inclusion to raise awareness of diversity issues in international affairs, expand career pathways for historically underrepresented students, and create a more inclusive community.
- Led the transformation of the School's undergraduate and graduate curricula, including the introduction of new first-year seminars taught by full-time faculty for all incoming SIS undergraduates, a new capstone experience for graduate students, who work in small teams on projects with external partners, increased skills training and one-on-one career mentorship with alumni.
- Completed the fundraising for the SIS building and raised significant funds to support student scholarships, internships and study abroad.
- Built a communications infrastructure in order to better inform internal and external audiences of the accomplishments of students, faculty, staff and alumni.
- Established the SIS Office of Career Development in order to better serve undergraduate and graduate students and to assist alumni at any stage of their careers.
- Hosted numerous world leaders including U.S. President Barack Obama, Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, and Chinese Vice-Premier Liu Yandong.
